A DIRECTOR SETS A CHALLENGE

Hello and welcome to Lexington Children's Theatre's 83rd season and our production of Junie B. in Jingle Bells, Batman Smells!. Lexington Children's Theatre is excited to offer this contemporary classic here at The Lexington Opera House. Junie B. Jones is a spunky first-grader who processes the world in fascinating ways. We are all constantly negotiating our feelings toward the events of the day and the way people treat us. During the pandemic, we've been isolated and many of us long for moments of socialization and fellowship. We forget that it takes a village full of kindness to create a warm and just world. But sometimes our point of view is based on our wants and needs, and sometimes we forget about others' challenges and desires. As Junie B. learns this important lesson, this play reminds all of us to show kindness and empathy to our fellow human beings. During this holiday season, may we all take a moment to reflect upon our place in this world and choose to make a difference in the lives of people around us. Thank you for making Lexington Children's Theatre a part of your holiday season, and best wishes to you and yours!!

LAND ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Indigenous peoples have lived on the land now called Kentucky for at least 12,000 years. Every community owes its existence and heritage to generations from around the world who contributed their hopes, dreams, and stories to making the history that led to this moment. Indigenous peoples have always lived on the land that is now called Kentucky and continue to live here today. The place we now call Kentucky is primarily Shawnee, Cherokee, Chickasaw, and Osage land.

A commonly cited claim many of us heard in history class growing up is that this region was merely a hunting ground. This claim is a myth, perpetuated at first by land speculators who wished to improve land sales, and still today to absolve settler colonists and their descendants from grappling with their history of land theft, genocide, and white supremacy. The continuation of this myth is harmful for all of us.
